Ferris Bueller's Day Off is a 1986 American teen comedy movie written, co-produced and directed by John Hughes, and also co-produced by Tom Jacobson. The movie stars Matthew Broderick as Ferris Bueller, a high-school slacker who skips school for a day in Chicago, with Mia Sara as Sloane and Alan Ruck as Cameron. Ferris regularly “breaks the fourth wall”¹ to explain his techniques and inner thoughts.

Hughes wrote the screenplay in less than a week. The movie began to be filmed in September 1985 and finished in November. Featuring many Chicago landmarks, including the Art Institute of Chicago, the movie was Hughes' love letter to Chicago: "I really wanted to capture as much of Chicago as I could. Not just in the architecture and landscape, but the spirit", he said.

Released by Paramount Pictures on June 11th, 1986, the movie became one of the top-grossing movies of the year, receiving US$70.1 million over a US$5.8 million budget. It was enthusiastically acclaimed by critics and audiences alike, praising the light tone, Hughes' direction, the performances (particularly that of Broderick and Ruck), humor, soundtrack, and messages. In 2014, the movie was selected for preservation in the National Film Registry by the Library of Congress, being deemed "culturally, historically, or aesthetically significant."

The movie largely received positive reviews from critics. Roger Ebert gave it three out of four stars, calling it "one of the most innocent movies in a long time," and "a sweet, warm-hearted comedy." Richard Roeper called the movie "one of my favorite movies of all time. (...) I can watch it again and again".
